Smoke Jumping on the Western Fire Line

Conscientious Objectors During World War II

By Mark Matthews

Foreword by Senator George McGovern

Based in Missoula, Montana, the experimental smoke-jumping program began in 1939, but before the project could expand, the war effort drained available manpower. In 1942 an important group of World War II conscientious objectors, the men who volunteered for Civilian Public Service as U.S. Forest Service smoke jumpers, stepped in. Smoke jumping soon became the Forest Service's first line of defense against wildfires in the West.

From the Marias River to the North Pole

A Montana History in Story Poems

By Bonnie Buckley Moldonado

In collaboration with Patrick F. Buckley III

The lives of the Montanans portrayed in these poems are transformed by tremendous loss and hardship. Their spiritual survival of the loss of land, several wars, and the Great Depression is made possible by faith, laughter, love, resilience, and redemption. These well-researched Montana stories, told in poems and accompanied by archival photographs, span more than a century.

Darkest Before Dawn

Sedition and Free Speech in the American West

By Clemens P. Work

Darkest Before Dawn takes to task Montana's 1918 sedition law that shut down freedom of speech. It became a model for the federal sedition act passed in 1918. Work explores the assault on civil rights during times of war when dissent is perceived as unpatriotic. The themes of this cautionary tale clearly resonate in the events of the early twenty-first century.

A River Runs Through It

By Norman Maclean

Wood Engravings by Barry Moser

A retired English professor who began writing fiction at the age of seventy, Maclean produced what is now recognized as one of the classic American stories of the twentieth century. By turns raunchy, poignant, caustic, and elegiac, these are superb tales which express, in Maclean's own words "a little of the love I have for the earth as it goes by".
